Five million pictures of Senator Harding have been ordered by the Republican committee, and the party is on, without waiting for the Democratic candidate to arrive.

Small editors throughout the country would like to know how the committee manages to get enough white paper to print five million big lithographs.

The next interesting thing in politics will be William Jennings Bryan making the Democratic convention in San Francisco jump through the hoop. In his bedroom writing, as he appeared about 2 o'clock yesterday morning, Bryan is a quiet, listening man, willing to hear any argument. But in a national convention he changes as completely as the sea lion when it flips off a rock into the water. In conversation Bryan rules and all the little fish get out of the way. If he had been on Johnson's side in the convention just ended you would have seen and heard something. Bryan, writing for the Hearst papers, says that all the Democrats need for victory is the labor vote and a strong prohibition plank.

Mr. Bryan should practice that performance by putting a saucy bird and a cat in the same cage. If he finds his canary bird when he comes back he may also find his labor vote after he has left it for a while locked up in a platform with a strong prohibition plank.

The Democrats undoubtedly will nominate McAdoo. Reactionary Democratic papers want a Mr. Davis, who is now Ambassador in London, one of whom more than ninety-nine millions Americans never heard.

If Democrats want to do anything more than ridiculous at this election, and they will be fortunate if they succeed in doing no more than that, they will have to choose somebody well known. Millions of Americans workmen know, speaking of campaign funds, that McAdoo added more than a thousand millions a year to the wages of railroad men. That's a hard talking about and well spent.

Mr. Bryan, because of his individual following, might be the strongest Democratic candidate excepting McAdoo. That while everybody respects Mr. Bryan's sincerity as to prohibition, Democrats to win must have workmen's votes. And "Kept Us Out of Beer" is not a slogan to get workmen to vote. They may not know what is good for them, but they think they know.

Six Presidents of the United States have come from Ohio: Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Harrison, McKinley and Taft. Democrats may see well realize that unless something unusual happens, seventh, Harding, is also going to "come from Ohio." In this country elections are settled, not so much by talking in favor of your own man as by talking against the other man, and there does not seem to be very much to talk against Harding and Coolidge except. "Please do me a favor and elect them."

It is true that these two were nominated because financial interests permitted and wanted it. That was true of the other six from Ohio except Grant and Taft. It is also true that the continuous rejection of Hiram Johnson by the same big influence and quite properly, and average "little American," "We don't want to be bothered with him," but then the average little American is easily won over, and at Lord Northcliffe put it, "very docile."

DELEGATE COUPLE MURDER
Detectives Leave New York to Take Back Man and Woman for Grilling

New York, June 14.—Detectives left today for an undisclosed out-of-town point, with instructions to bring back a man and a woman whose names became involved over night in the investigation of the murder of Joseph B. Ewell, wealthy turfman and whist expert. The couple are to be taken to the Ewell home and questioned.

Developments strengthened the theory that Ewell, the tall, dapper, middle-aged man from Palm Beach, New York and Newport, was slain in vengeance. Mrs. Ewell, her friends say, did not know of this threat and was not in any way responsible for it.

Discovery of a crash-killed blackmailer, middle-aged man, and the mysterious absence of a young woman, who had been seen there the night of the "bridge game" sent detectives on a hunt for two men. One of these, according to a dramatic story related to the police by Ewell's agent after, seemed the whist expert by the attention to the matter's estranged wife, Mrs. Helen.

DELEGATES MET BY BAND
March to State House as Thousands Cheer; Received by Governor

A tumult of whistles, bells, cheers and other noisy demonstrations greeted the returning delegates from the Republican national convention at Chicago when they reached the South Station today.

The celebration, for which the path from the South Station to the State House was decorated, served both to honor the nomination of Governor Calvin Coolidge and to welcome the delegates who had "put him over" for the Vice-presidential nomination.

The demonstration and the parade, headed by a band, which escorted the delegates from the train to the steps of the State House, where Governor Coolidge received them in State, was the result of a full hard work by local College enthusiasts, and the Boston Chamber of Commerce, through the aid of the city authorities instructed the Ambassadors and other municipal properties to treat their while and cheer their bells with abandon in honor of Governor Coolidge.

VENGEANCE IS BELIEVED TO BE MOTIVE IN MURDER OF ELWELL

FIFTY WIGS FOR HOUSE OF DEAD WIST EXPERT

Dwight Elwell, and said to the first man after a quarter.

"Will murder you for what you just said to me?"

OTHER MAN VANISHED.

The second man disappeared from his bachelor apartment in a fashionably neighborhood last Friday, a few hours after Elwell had been seen in his rooming room at his home, No. 24 West Seventh street, with a 45-caliber pistol, which discharged upon the floor a paper shell stamped "U. S. Army, 1917."

This young man, who noted in the name Elwell as Elwell, was interested in a beautiful young woman upon whose charms Elwell had recently cast the lure of his magnetic eyes. The blackjack was the only weapon found in the house, and the only weapon Elwell has ever been known to carry. In revealing the story that lay behind the discovery in his room, Joseph S. Elwell revealed that his own was the second husband of Mrs. Helen Doris Elwell.

QUESTIONS COINCE.

Assistant District Attorney Joyce said:

"In my opinion Elwell was killed because he revealed the identity of some man's name."

Mr. Joyce claimed for hours the women friends of Elwell, the Countess B. de Balthazar, whose maiden name, it is said, was Amelia Kiefer, and her sister, Mrs. L. or Molly Balthazar.

Detectives say her picture was found in Elwell's house. Elwell said this is a new phase in the career of the remarkable man who was operative of the American Protective League. Both women said they had been seen for some time.

Elwell, a dandy of the track and the Rita-Carlton, were a dark brown and had several fine teeth. None of his women friends who died or married with the tall, dark, well-cut-up composite knew of these "first said" to masculine beauty.

Forty or fifty wigs, all of the same color, were found in the room.

GUIDED BY WIFE.

The summer's House of Curbs was built by Mrs. Elwell. She guided him and stood as a shield before the cold winds of worldly criticism, lest his fragile structure fall prematurely.

Elwell later founded his marriage, home life and small son. But he was one of those by no means a dual man "made" by marriage.

"A man invariably that often said the woman who has made him, signed Mrs. Elwell, as she moved into the quiet afternoon of the dead man's career.

"Fidelity—I could forgive that, but ingratitude was to me his vile vice."

"He could never forgive me a mental superiority. He was an ardent youth from Brooklyn when we met him. My family were well known."

"I can speak without bitterness of recent years. It all seems so long ago and during our last years and the same name was not actual man and wife, but miles apart."

SEVERED THREATS.

"Then one day he walked out, and he did not care to continue his marital existence any longer."

"I remember the many letters he sent me and how I read them above all the others. I don't know how much he was suffering."

"He was suffering from something I can't describe. He was so lonely. I can speak without bitterness of recent years. It all seems so long ago and during our last years and the same name was not actual man and wife, but miles apart."

Washington Law Firm Loses Heavily by Escape of Draft Dodger

By International News Service.

Washington, June 14.—(Hopes of the Washington law firm of Hessel and Bailey for a fat fee were dimming when Grover Cleveland Bergdool, wealthy draft evader, under sentence of five years imprisonment, escaped from his military guard at Philadelphia, it was revealed when the terms of his agreement with D. Clarence Gibbons, chief attorney for Bergdool, became known today.

Under the terms of this agreement, Hessel and Bailey were paid a cash retainer of $2,500 and were to receive additional amounts under conditions.

Forty thousand dollars if they obtained the release of Bergdool through action of the War Department, the attorney board, or the civil courts.

Six thousand dollars for every hour spent for presenting arguments before the War Department, the attorney board, or the civil courts.

The reward offered for the capture of Hessel and Bailey, the total $25,000, was offered by Hessel and Bailey. That firm also paid for the printing and distribution of false circulars bearing the photograph and description of the fugitive.

General Samuel T. Ansell admitted that the terms as given above are accurate.

Bergdool, a man answering his description, made an unsuccessful attempt to cross the international line into Mexico West of Matamoros, a Mexican city, yesterday.

poem. Its beauty and philosophy were comforting to me always. One afternoon Mr. Elwell came home when I was reading it. He asked me what book was I always had in my hand. I gave it to him to look at it.

"That was typical of him. I saw the poetry in it—he saw only the wine."

LIKED THE "JUG OF WINE."

"The 'Jug of Wine'—the life of bread' were all he cared for in life. It was the 'Jug' beside him 'in the wilderness' of his wild living."

"Town and country houses finally came into our line of possession, and I realized my efforts in it. Elwell's heart was not in vain. He moved generally in the best circles, thanks to me."

At Elwell's death I reached me a young girl's attention to a young man named that colony. I was at first blind to his delusions, but a society friend told me that he was a draft evader. He was blind enough to say that he was a draft evader. He was blind enough to say that he was a draft evader.

"Movie' Melodrama Is Acted In Earnest

Mrs. Mary Cavanaugh, a Dwight street landlady, started something at Tremont and Bromfield streets today when she threw her arms about a man and cried loudly for help.

There was a thrilling chase in the Tremont street, a fight with the police, the calling on firemen and civilians and a desperate leap for safety through the window of a City Hall police station into St. Alker, SUPERSTITIONS CAPTURE.

Mrs. Cavanaugh turned detective, superintended the capture and secured the triumphant completion at the City Hall station against Edward Callahan, who, she claimed, had robbed her of $22.50.

The casualties were: Patrolman Almon T. Daniels, fracture of the left elbow. Edward Callahan, scratches and cuts.

The "movie" melodrama began when Mrs. Cavanaugh recognized her former lover and fell on the neck. "Hoop! Police!" a wondering crowd heard her cry, while she tightened her grip on the struggling Callahan. Callahan broke away.

LEAP THROUGH WINDOW.

After a chase through the streets of W. A. Kenna of Ladder 4, and Patrolman Albert P. Swett, and put out only after a desperate fight. He was pulled when taken into the station, and allied toward a police window. He leaped to the street, a distance of fifteen feet, closely pursued by Patrolman Almon T. Daniels.

Callahan was slightly injured, and Daniels was also injured, sustaining a fracture of the left elbow and bruise in his foot. The officer was taken to the City Hall station, Callahan to the City Prison.

Mrs. Cavanaugh, charged that Callahan stole the money from her hand while she was shouting him through some furnished rooms.

RECEPTION ON STEPS.

The governor, accompanied by his family, went to the steps of the State House, where he was met by a large number of his friends and admirers. He was greeted with a shower of flowers and a chorus of "Good morning, Mr. Coolidge."

Two long lines of people, one on each side of the steps, waited for a chance to shake hands with the governor. He was so friendly and accessible that he was able to shake hands with almost everyone who came forward.

The governor's family, including his wife and children, were also present. They were all dressed in their best and were looking on with interest and pride.

The governor's speech, which was broadcasted all over the country, was a masterpiece of simplicity and directness. He spoke of his love for his country and his confidence in the American people.

CAN THIS MAN WIN?

The ninth article of the American review of the Democratic presidential possibilities deals with John W. Davis, Ambassador to the Court of St. James. It follows:

By STEPHEN G. JACKSON, Fellow Townsman of the Brilliant West Virginian.

John W. Davis, ambassador to the court of St. James, has wonderful chance to win the Democratic presidential nomination. He is pre-eminently a Democrat, is hampered by no factional fights, has been involved in no legislation in a long public career that has antagonized the best interests of the people, and has no enemies. He can carry his home State of West Virginia by an overwhelming majority.

No candidate now prominently mentioned for the Democratic nomination has sufficient votes pledged to him to insure nomination, and John W. Davis is the only man upon whom the followers of every candidate can compromise without endangering the party's success at the polls in November. He will even add prestige to the party if nominated and elected.

Ambassador Davis has not sought the nomination of the party, but he has campaigned hard to be made the Democratic nominee. He has been successful in his efforts, and he has been elected to the position of ambassador to the court of St. James. He was re-elected in 1912.

JOHN W. DAVIS.

In 1912 President Wilson appointed him ambassador to the court of St. James. He was elected in 1912 and 1916. He was re-elected in 1912.

DEMOCRATIC LEAGUE BE REPEATED

New England Democrats Say Convention Must Not Straddle Issue

League of Nations. Most Democrats of America will be concerned if America remains out of the League of Nations. It is the League of Nations that is the issue of the day. It is the League of Nations that is the issue of the day. It is the League of Nations that is the issue of the day.

MAINE SEN SEEN IN LEAGUE

Menace in League

Lumber, Mr. June 14. — Prominent citizens of the town discussed the League of Nations as follows:

W. B. BODGE, merchant—J am and have always been opposed to a League of Nations. We have grown great without it and we shall continue to grow great in the same way. America need not do otherwise than follow the lead of Washington and Jefferson if she wishes to hold her place in the world. Let Europe fight its battles. We have done what we could to afford European affairs and it has cost us dearly. I cannot see where we are under further obligations that will make a fearful cost of human lives and property. I feel that the Democratic national convention will strengthen itself with the people of the nation and will be a plank against the league, which is a great mistake. I am afraid we have partly committed ourselves to some sort of a coalition with European nations, but if we can honestly recede from the position in which we are placed it will be to our advantage. I have always felt that the country was large enough to be occupied in attending to its own affairs.

5,000 MOOSE WILL PARADE IN LAWRENCE

Plans have been completed for the tenth annual New England convention of the Loyal Order of Moose, which this year will be held at Lawrence, Mass., on July 2, 3, 4 and 5. There are indications, officials of the lodge add today, that fully 5,000 members will participate in the parade on the closing day. As the delegates stepped from their train into the South Station a brass band struck up an air of welcome and a huge crowd of eager Republicans began a series of cheers for Coolidge, which were continued at frequent intervals until the State House was reached.

FOUR WORDS FROM WOOD

"Congratulations on your nomination," was what General Leonard Wood, the defeated aspirant for the Presidential nomination, said in his message from Senator Henry W. Keane of New Hampshire, former House or Congressman and former Senator John W. Davis.

For a few hours during the morning the Governor was the center of attention to visitors, who crowded with his secretary, desiring a word of official business. At 1 p. m. he walked from his office in the Union Club across Beacon street to the State House. Among those waiting in the outer office as he started for the State House were Colonel William J. Keane, formerly with the State Department, Dr. William J. Sullivan, a brother of Congressman William J. Keane.

NEARS FROM HOOVER

Hundreds of telegrams from Republican leaders in various parts of the nation extending congratulations and assurances of support have been received by the Governor since his selection. Herbert Hoover, and William Howard Taft were among the first to tele congratulate Taft's message said:

"I congratulate you most heartily and sincerely on your nomination as Vice-President. The ticket of Harding and Coolidge will sweep the country and its certain victory means a useful and successful administration of the affairs of this country the next four years."

Hoover sent the following message:

"I wish to add my warmest personal congratulations to the most"

When a Girl Marries

Interesting Developments in the Trials and Slight Jealousies of a Newly Wedded Couple

By Ann Lisle

JIM came dashing back from the telephone in high good humor. "Hello, Jeanie," he called. "I've just come to see you. I'm glad you're going to be married. I'm glad you're going to be married. I'm glad you're going to be married."

"That's splendid, Jim," she said heartily. "I'm glad you're going to be married. I'm glad you're going to be married. I'm glad you're going to be married."

"What do you mean?" she asked, hating my own question that Jim was showing over the idea of this triumph. "I mean that Virginia Dill is going to get married. I mean that Virginia Dill is going to get married. I mean that Virginia Dill is going to get married."

Arm in Arm
A minute later Jim and Jeanie came in arm and arm. Her eyes were a little moist. Jim was gray.

Just Like a Woman
Virginia was very happy to be on good terms with Jim again. Dangerous topics were avoided, and we all have our own way to the happiness of this reconciliation without openly acknowledging there was a thing at a reconciliation in the world.

"Now, Jeanie," he whispered, as he put his lips lightly to my forehead. "I'm glad you're going to be married. I'm glad you're going to be married. I'm glad you're going to be married."

Then he advanced to the attack, puffing smoke from his cigarette, trying to buy the old estate. "I'm glad you're going to be married. I'm glad you're going to be married. I'm glad you're going to be married."

"I haven't succeeded. I had Neal on the trail of the title and present ownership for weeks," replied Jim carelessly.

"Hark! Get it for your pretty soon, I'm sure," replied Virginia, a little too politely, frozen again at the mere mention of Neal.

"I could never have mental reservation about him. It was almost as if she had said, 'Why don't you get a real real estate man on the job?'"

"You might try," began Virginia. "All right," broke in Jim. "Care to sell? Name your own figure, Mrs. Dalton."

"Why, what?" stammered Virginia, looking from one to the other of us completely mystified. "What do you mean? I don't get the point. Is there a joke?"

Meditations of a "Rib"

By HELEN ROWLAND

Copyright, 1920, by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

THE most brilliant epigrams are those unwritten ones, which race through a woman's mind, two minutes after her husband has found out the house and slammed the door behind him, with a sound like a "damn."

When a wife insists on crowning her husband with a halo he spends most of his life in struggling to get it off—like a little girl with her murrel.

Many a little marriage man for the comfort of leaning on his manly strength—and then learns to love him for the boyish weaknesses which make him lean on her for comfort.

Those "beauty windows" of the newest Paris gowns might come in conveniently if one could substitute them for patches in the tops of one's gloves, the heels of one's shoes, and the knees of hubby's trousers.

After a few years of married life no woman needs a ouija board to tell her exactly what a man is going to do or say next.

Why do some husbands regard the wedding bell as the signal to stop offering a woman sweets, compliments and kisses, and to begin offering her roast beef, advice and criticism?

When two artistic souls marry, the devil usually takes a malicious delight in adding a touch of brimstone to the "match."

Nonsense! A man doesn't lose all his sentiment after marriage. It merely gets smothered under a weight of care, indignation, contentment or avoirdupois.

No amount of embolism ever stifled a woman's yearning to be called "Cutie" and no amount of genius ever killed a man's desire to be called and to cry in baby-talk.

Improving the Sentiment
A complimentary dinner was being given in one of the small cities in Ontario to two visitors who were members of a famous Canadian regiment, and were home on sick leave. One of the local speakers had been carefully coached about giving the "man of the evening," but became flustered and said what he made of Mr. Herbie, the gallant fighter, last on the list, was the first to leave the hall.

Silence reigned, then another speaker came gallantly to the rescue. "Greetings," he began. "You must excuse my friend; he never could give a toast decently; he never used to public speaking. Now I'll give the toast: 'Hark to the gallant fighter, equal to none!'"

It Was His Mother-in-Law
Gentleman of the jury, the emcee counted round up his eloquent words.

She Gained 33 Pounds
Among the many interesting cases of recent diet and increase in weight reported to the diet of Mrs. Phoebe is that of Mrs. Rose Herbie, who was thin and nervous when she came to the diet of Mrs. Phoebe. Mrs. Phoebe's faithful, who has reached the age of 60, is a delicate woman, and her improvement in Mrs. Herbie's appearance was a great success.

The Swiftest of the Dogs

The swiftest dog in the world, the borzoi, or Russian wolfhound, has made record runs that show seventy-five feet in a second, while the gazelle has shown measured speed of more than eighty feet a second, or 4,800 feet a minute.

ABOUT OUR GOOD FRIEND Nelson

Copyright, 1920, by The Lodge Syndicate.

NEILSON
VARIATIONS—Neilson, Neale, Nello.
RACIAL ORIGIN—Middle English.
SOURCE—A woman's name.

It would seem that women, after all, did amount to something in the Middle Ages; and though perhaps they did not have the privileges of the vote, hundreds upon hundreds of them were prominent enough in their own communities to do what not even the outcasts of today are claiming as a privilege. They bequeathed their own names to their descendants.

Perhaps it would be more accurate, however, to say that the communities in which they lived did so, for family names were a growth of custom, not of law, and generations rather than the definitely adopted appellations of families.

There are literally dozens of family names common in America today which trace back to the given names of women in those days following the Norman conquest, when wars on the continent were from the Norman-English monarchs and their nobility their lodgings in Normandy and left them no alternative but to call themselves Englishmen.

Eleanor, or, as it was more commonly called, Alenora, was a popular name for girls among the Normans. In the course of the centuries succeeding the conquest it became variously Amoria, Annet, Alton, Leonora, Lina, Linot and Neil (diminutive resulting from the Anglo-Saxon inflection).

Neilson simply means "the son of Neil." The earliest record of the name occurs in this fashion, as "Fit-Nel" and "Fit-Nel." The name was the Norman method of expressing "Neil" and "Neil" the abbreviation of the Latin "Nellus," meaning son, commonly used by the clerks of that time. Neil and Neilson are variations.

- (2) To elect the Cabinet officers and make them responsible to Congress.
- (3) To deprive the President of the power of patronage; to put all public offices as nearly as possible

- under Civil Service, and have appointments made by a committee of Congress.
- (4) To elect Federal Judges, including the Supreme Court Justices, by popular vote.
- (5) To apply the Initiative, the Referendum and the Recall to national matters.

Treachery Kept Coolidge From First Place

The way that Governor Coolidge's name swept through the convention when he was nominated for President, and the ease with which he defeated all of the other nominees indicates the possibilities of his candidacy for President if all his friends had been loyal in the convention.

The way that delegates from Massachusetts, wearing Coolidge buttons and professing to be for Coolidge for President, damned their candidate with faint praises, with a shrug of the shoulders and a curl of the lip, was one of the scandals of the convention. The ease with which he was nominated for Vice-President, which the bosses were willing that he should have, shows what they could have done for his presidential aspirations.

He was more popular a man than any other candidate, except Johnson, among the delegates, and far more popular than the man whom the bosses have nominated for President. Whether or not, in the opinion of the Massachusetts delegates, he deserved the good opinion in which he was held by the delegates from other States, this fact ought not to have incited so many of them to betray him.

His nomination for Vice-President was the one spontaneous thing the convention did. Shall we ever see again an unbiased, free Republican convention? No man in this generation can remember the last one.

League of Nations Like World Highwayman

The Democratic delegates to the National Democratic Convention from Rhode Island have adopted a resolution declaring that they will not support any League of Nations which requires the association of the United States with Great Britain or any other nation which is denying to any substantial body of people the right of self-determination.

Can anybody doubt the wisdom, the justice, the statesmanship and the democratic and American consistency of the position which these Democratic delegates from Rhode Island have taken?

We were persuaded to enter the great convention enthusiastically because we were told, and we believed the President when he told us, that we were fighting to make the world safe for democracy. The President formulated the definition of democracy for which we were fighting in fourteen now-celebrated points. The most important, the most discussed, the most relied-upon point was that point which declared that all peoples had an inalienable right to determine for themselves their own form of government without interference from outside.

After the war was over President Wilson told us that he was going to Europe to help construct the machinery of peace by which the democracy that we were supposed to have achieved by our victory might become an every-day working principle. We all welcomed the attempt for we all took Great Britain at her word and believed, contrary to her long and consistent record of international perfidy, which gave her the name of Perfidious Albion, that she accepted in good faith America's definition of democracy, which included the right of self-determination among other important rights.

Then we found that Great Britain was laughing up her sleeve at the President; that she did not mean what she said; that, far from abandoning the right of self-determination in her relations with other smaller peoples, she was starting upon a new career of imperialism more repugnant, if possible, to the fourteen points and to democracy in the world than even her conduct in the past had been. Everywhere she was grabbing and was grabbing in the world belonging to other people she grabbed, or is in the act of grabbing. After the World War she stands revealed as a more shameless imperialist, a more defiant violator of the right of self-determination, a more hopeless moral throwback to the Dark Ages than she ever was.

She will dominate the League, no matter what reservations we may attempt to make. We cannot prevent her from exercising her six votes to our one. The most we can do is to say that we will not ourselves be bound by a vote she casts for us one. But if the League is bound by it, then the prestige of the League will be controlled by it and our membership in the League, giving it greater prestige, will give Great Britain and her imperialism a greater prestige to control.

We may say in another reservation, with respect to Article X, that we will not be bound to use troops to hold down Ireland, Persia, Korea, Shantung, Egypt, India or any other oppressed State, or to prevent, for example, Russia or Germany, in a war with England or Japan, from freeing these or any other oppressed peoples whom those imperialistic and dominating members of the League now hold down with rifle, bayonet and machine gun. But if we are associated with Great Britain and Japan we give them our moral approbation and we add our prestige to the prestige of the League which they control.

If we enter this League in association with Great Britain and Japan, and we are sorry to be obliged now to include France and Poland, whose imperialism and whose denial of the right of self-determination is one of the most saddening and astonishing results of the war, we shall give our moral sanction to their conduct and to the boundaries which they have established in the world without right and without consent of the people they are undertaking to govern and exploit. There is no reservation whatever that we have adopted or could adopt, or could advocate, which could prevent these robber nations, who will dominate the League, from using the advantage of the sanction of their international freebooting by our association with them.

Let us suppose that a hard-pressed highwayman invites a wayfarer to join him in his lawless career and the wayfarer replies, "I don't like the way you earn your living. I don't want anything to do with robbing and murdering people." To which the highwayman replies, "Oh, well, you can look the other way when I hold up a victim and, if necessary, shoot him. I don't object to that, but we can be a lot of help to each other in other ways. You can carry my surplus luggage so that I can carry my weapons. You can cook for me and keep the campfires going when I am out on my marauding. If another robber should attack me when I have not injured you, you can help me defend myself. I am holding five or six prisoners for ransom. You can help me feed them, but you need not help me to keep them if they should attempt to break away or some honest friends of theirs come to rescue them. But you could help me defend my own property if I were attacked in another quarter at the same time that the attempt was being made to rescue my prisoners. Then again everybody on the highway knows your power and your fighting ability and it will help me to get away with my loot, for, for though they may know you say you won't help me directly commit a robbery or a murder, they won't know when the result of our association may lead you into a situation in which you will find it difficult to avoid doing it."

The Colt Is Not So Easily Captured

Now if the wayfarer should agree to go and live with the robber on those terms, what should we say of the morality of the association? We know that the law would condemn it as almost as illegal as the highwayman's career. Does anyone doubt its immorality also?

Those who advocate our joining the League of Nations with reservations would join the highwayman with the reservations he proposed. But our Rhode Island Democratic delegates would say to the highwayman, "No, we will not go with you on any such reservations but if you will stop your career of crime, release your prisoners and deal with all men justly, we will go and live with you and will defend you against all comers, not only those who have no grievances against you but even against those who attack you in revenge for past oppression."

Which answer is most likely to free the highwayman from danger of robbery, the answer of the wayfarer who would go and live with the robber on limited terms or the answer of the wayfarer who would have nothing to do with the robber while he continued his lawless career?

More Truth Than Poetry

Saving the Nation

FROM now till fairly in November
The notes of warning will be loud,
And only wise men will remember
The shining sun behind the cloud.
The time-worn tricks will be repeated,
Calamities will loom ahead;
But reason won't be quite unseated,
And hope will not be really dead.

WE'LL hear that Tammany is scheming
To turn a nasty trick or two,
And that the Wall Street sharps are dreaming
Of plundering that they will do.
And writing collars pro and con,
And foolish people will be finding
Few reasons to keep striving on.

AT every country store excitement
And bitter feeling will prevail;
Bill Smith will bring a strong indictment
Against his neighbor, Ezra Hale.
Harsh words that should be left unspoken
Will cause old friends to separate,
And many noses will be broken.

Before we know the nation's fate,
JIM JONES will have sublime intentions
In blocking Tony Wheeler's eyes.
Therefore be glad, for such discussions
Prove where our country's safety lies.
When Brown and Green become vehement
They fool themselves, but why complain?
Without the usual disagreement
We might forget the whole campaign.

Ye TOWNE GOSSIP

By K. C. B.

DEAR K. C. B.—You admit a fondness for and very frequently write about cats. I wonder if you realize what a great menace cats are to the song birds that we look forward to each Spring.

And you profess to be also a lover of birds! AGNES M.

NEWARK, N. J.

MY DEAR AGNES,

IT'S ALL right.

AND I'M glad you write me.

BUT AFTER all,

DON'T YOU really believe,

IF YOU have any quarrel,

THAT IT'S with the Creator,

AND DO you really think,

THAT YOU and I,

HAVE any cause,

TO MAKE complaint.

AGAINST a cat,

THAT CATCHES a bird,

WHEN MEN go out,

AND KILL for no other reason,

WHATEVER IT is,

OUR APPETITES,

SAY THEY shall kill,

AND WOMEN folk,

WEAR COSTLY furs,

AND FEATHERED hats,

AND CALFSKIN shoes,

AND WEAR the skin,

OF BABY goats,

UPON their hands,

AND ALL these things,

MUST SUFFER death,

TO FILL our wants,

WHICH MAY be just,

AND ANYWAY,

I HAVE no quarrel,

WITH ANYTHING,

THAT SWIMS,

OR FLIES,

IF SOMEBODY kill 'em.

6,369 Words in the G. O. P. Platform; They Contain Only One Decision

The tendency of both the old parties is to make their platforms SAY more and mean less and less.

The Republican platform is so long that not one newspaper reader in ten will read all of it, and the voter who does not read it in a newspaper will never read it.

It will disappear into the obscurity of filed documents and reappear only in almanacs.

When men know what they mean to do, when they make important decisions or adopt a definite course of action, they always use very few words.

When men make excuses for non-action and do not know where they stand or do they always use many words.

It is so with the Republican party, and it will be so with the Democratic party.

The Ten Commandments contained 297 words, and they have not in more than three thousand years been improved upon.

The Declaration of Independence put a new charter of liberty, including all the causes of action, in 1,321 words.

Lincoln's Gettysburg speech, the noblest utterance by a Republican, contained 268 words.

The Sermon on the Mount contained 142 words.

The Crucifixion, the most splendid event in human history, was described by Matthew with a pathos and force that have never been surpassed in 1,200 words.

Even the Constitution of the United States, "the greatest document ever struck off at one time by the mind of man," as Gladstone said, furnished a complete charter of government for a new nation in 4,394 words.

The Republican platform contains 6,369 words.

Apart from the League of Nations clause, in which Senator Johnson won a decisive triumph over the reactionary forces in the convention and over the dominating private financial interests outside the convention, the platform has little significance.

Those who read it, as many did, by a paragraph here and there, will find in it many alluring but vague promises, the acceptance of which will be a triumph of hope over experience.

The Presidency will be decided in November by the character of the chief candidates nominated and their backers, and by what those candidates say and do during the campaign, more than by the party platforms.

Political conventions do not make issues in the United States.

The issues are made by the people and are thrust upon timid professional politicians after they are made.

Illustration: The four most important things that have happened in the United States in the eight years the Republican party has been out of power have been: 1—The war. 2—Prohibition. 3—Woman Suffrage. 4—The Income Tax.

But the last two Republican National Conventions, in 1912 and 1916, lacked the courage to make any definite declaration on either of these subjects.

On Woman Suffrage "the right of each State to determine the questions for itself" was recognized.

Only after the fight of the progressives on these issues has been won does the Republican National Convention muster courage to approve the fight. It will be so with the public ownership of public utilities, which this year's convention condemns.

Upon the three questions now most discussed by the people—Prohibition, Prohibition and the Soldiers' Bonus—this Republican National Convention is afraid to say anything one way or the other.

Even on the great question of Russia, with which the New York Chamber of Commerce resolved weeks before last that we should have nothing to do, the convention was too timid to say what it meant, but did waffle in a "resumption of trade with all countries with which we are not at war."

On Prohibition the action of the convention has an element of humor.

The Platform Draft Committee agreed upon a paragraph of thirty-four words pledging the support of the Republican party to the decision of the Supreme Court on the prohibitory Constitutional Amendment "when it is handed down."

The court decision came a week ago today, after the plank was agreed to.

The committee then threw out of the platform all reference to Prohibition.

This is highly important because the Supreme Court's decision, while settling "prohibition of intoxicating beverages," declares by its decision on the Volstead Enforcement act that it is still within the power of any Congress to say what is intoxicating, and to let in light wines and beers if Congress or the people so desire.

The court of last resort, therefore, leaves this issue still before the people. That is probably one reason why the Republican National Convention was afraid to touch it. If the issue were a dead loss the party would have adopted its "or fail!"

If you study the history of political parties only by reading their platform it would give you little but contempt for political parties. And yet parties achieve good objectives by adopting and carrying out ideas or reforms forced upon them by brave men or women leaders outside the party organizations.

But on our supreme issue—Mr. Wilson's League Covenant—the convention, led by a few men who were not afraid, made a momentous decision.

In an interview for the London Times, given in Paris early in 1919, President Wilson said that the principles of independence declared by Presidents Washington and Monroe could no longer be followed by the United States Government. "He understood that."

He greatly erred. The people declined to follow President Wilson as soon as his course was made plain to them.

His League Covenant cannot now in any event be ratified by any Senate without amendments entirely changing its character.

Even in the highly improbable event of a Democratic Convention declaration in favor of Mr. Wilson's covenant, and the still more improbable election of a Democratic Senate upon such a platform, the thirty-two Senators to be elected this Fall (one-third of the Senate) cannot now by any possibility secure a two-thirds Democratic vote for the League Covenant without radical amendments.

For that victory of American patriotism and principle we have to thank not the Republican National Convention so much as a few brave American Senators led by Johnson and Borah, Lodge and McCardell, aided by great Democrats like Senators Reed, Shields and Walsh.
